EXPRESSING YOURSELF: GIVING OPINION AND ACCEPTING SUGGESTIONS

It is essential to recognize the different structures and some specific vocabulary to give your own opinions, agree and disagree with other people.

Facts vs. opinions

To recognize the difference between opinion and fact you need to notice the language, but having in mind that sometimes people use fact's structure to write their opinions and make it sound trustful.

Modal verbs

They are a type of auxiliary verbs used to express:

- ability: can and could (past ability).
- permission: can, could (polite), and may (formal).
- possibility: can, could, may, and might.
- advice or suggestion: should.
- necessity or obligation: must (personal), have to (impersonal).
- prohibition: mustn't.

Adjectives

Words used to describe things or people.

Adjectives followed by prepositions:

- about: feelings and causes.
- of: causes of feelings.
- at: skills and abilities.
- to: connection between people or things.
- for: reason or direction of the adjective.
- in: reason or direction, but for some adjectives ending in -ed.

Opposite adjectives:

antonyms of the adjectives.

- good and bad; happy and sad; dark and shine; proud and disappointed etc.
